

Short bio Alessandra Solazzo

Alessandra holds a Bachelor and a Master degree in Law. After her dissertation on the comparison between the EU and the Chinese environmental law, she started her career as a legal practitioner while continuing to study an advanced post-graduate course on environmental law, organised by the University of Siena and the Chamber of Commerce of Siena (2012).

She has then been involved as a researcher in environmental law and sustainability joining both the Environmental Legal Team and Regulation for Sustainability - University of Siena, Italy. She was awarded a grant for the research project “The Environmental and Climate Change Law in the People’s Republic of China in comparison with the International and European Law”, University of Siena, Italy (2014).

Also, in 2015, an experience at the Global Sustainability Institute (Anglia Ruskin University – Cambridge), gave her the chance to focus her research in particular on ecosystem services and sustainability, supporting the spread of sustainability principles through collaborations and networking.

Her recent interests are focused on conservation, commons, ecosystems and legal education.
